Some history

European Consumer Day
At the initiative of its president, Ms Rangoni Machiavelli, the European Economic and Social Committee organised the first European Consumer Day on 15 March 1999. This initiative was extremely successful and received the immediate support of the European Commission and successive EU presidencies.

As a result, since the first three events held in Brussels, during which issues such as food security and safe use of the Internet were debated, the European Consumer Day has often been held in the country holding the EU presidency.

The EESC is a bridge between Europe and organised civil society. In this context, the European Consumer Day provides a forum where representatives of government, EU institutions and civil society organisations can exchange their views on various problems related to consumer affairs. Every year the event gathers high-level participants to discuss topical issues, whether focusing on the ongoing Commission initiatives or signalling problems that require more attention.

International Consumer Rights Day
On 15 March 1962, President John Kennedy made a declaration before Congress, during which he called for consumer rights to be defended and set out four fundamental rights:

- the right to safety;
- the right to be informed;
- the right to choose;
- the right to be heard.

President Kennedy’s words have lost none of their relevance in today’s world: "Consumers, by definition, include us all. They are the largest economic group in the economy, affecting and affected by almost every public and private economic decision. Two-thirds of all spending in the economy is by consumers. But they are the only important group in the economy which is not effectively organized, and whose views are often not heard."

The European Union has been developing a consumer protection policy since 1973. The European Economic and Social Committee has supported it since the first action programme was adopted in 1975.
